It's No Use Crying Over Spilled Milk: A Lesson within a Story from the Series, Learning to be Wise Sally Saffer

"It's No Use Crying Over Spilled Milk" From the Learning to be Wise series Lessons for children about life, values and common sense Like all stories in the Learning to be Wise series, it is based on an aphorism, which is a brief statement of principle or simple statement of truth. It is sure to captivate children with its appealing characters and interesting situations that they can relate to. "It's No Use Crying Over Spilled Milk" begins with a promised trip to the zoo for a grandmother and her three young grandchildren. An unexpected turn of events causes grandmother to express her feelings about the situation using this particular aphorism. Not being familiar with this funny old saying, the children are curious and want to know what it means. Grandmother explains and the children enjoy learning something new. At dinner that night, they share what they've learned about the aphorism with their mom and dad. The series is written for children ages 7-10 (grades 2-3). Age and/or grade may vary, depending on an individual child's reading ability.
