The Human Codex (The New Tellus Order) (Volume 1) A J Ralph

"Where does the dead line between justified violence and careless brutality go? It's as faint as a pair of juggler headlights in a blizzard tornado. I'm sure there was a line at some point. At some point. By now it's been buried beneath a thick layer of bullshit, bullets and blood. There comes a time in every SQUAD Guard's career when they're forced to make a decision whether to make the jump across that dead line and become another soulless vessel with a badge or to remain the personality, the human being they still are. We do everything that's expected of us. We keep this city breathing and yet it still spits blood on our helmets. With all the history Resurgo's harboured over the years we're the ones who walk the muddy aftermath. We put our lives on the line for our people every damned day to make them feel more secure; make them feel like this actually can be a place to call home, a safe haven from the beasts in the Outsides. We put our hearts and souls into clearing the streets of danger but it's never enough. That's the raw truth of it all. As if the upset citizens aren't enough we got the whole shitty ordeal with the NPAC hailing down on top of us like giant boulders from a mountain of pressure crushing our shoulders. Pesky terrorists with nothing but repulsive hate for the AMG and everything related. I've seen a lot of fellow Guards, my brothers and sisters in arms be hammered down by their stray bullets and grenades like they were nothing more than tacky target pieces on a bloodstained training field. I've seen it so much recently it saddens me to say it hardly touches me anymore; but when they gun down an off duty brother in the middle of his own city, it's fuckin' personal." Lieutenant Cameron Tapper of SQUAD Guard R-ITA has just been promoted following the brutal murder of his mentor and friend Patrick Madden. It is now his job to keep the squad together, train the new guy and together with the rest of the SQUAD Guard garrison make sure Resurgo doesn't fall into the hands of those who seek to destroy his city.
