The Hotton Report Robert K. McDonald

It began on the morning of December 16, 1944, when a quarter-million German troops stormed a thinly defended American line and crossed into the Ardennes region of Belgium and Luxembourg. The architect of the plan, Adolph Hitler, had postponed the attack nearly a week awaiting bad weather that would ground the Allied planes that controlled the skies of Europe. The objective: to capture the Belgian port of Antwerp, and to kill of as many Americans as possible along the way.

The Allied Expeditionary Forces under General Dwight D. Eisenhower were caught sleeping by the surprise offensive. Tens of thousands of American soldiers scrambled to stanch the attack, dispatched to dozens of key road centers and choke points across the Ardennes. Among them was Major General Maurice Rose, the legendary commander of the 3rd Armored Division, who found himself in his toughest fight without the firepower of two of his three combat commands. Outgunned and blind without air reconnaissance and support, Rose's depleted division fell back to the bridge village of Hotton with orders to find and engage the enemy, leaving behind a mixed bag of rear-guard troops believing they were out of harm's way. They weren't, and in the ensuing days the struggle to hold Hotton would be at the epicenter of the Second World War.

Intensely described and grippingly told, The Hotton Report is a blow-by-blow account of this critical battle, and captures the fierce fighting across the Ardennes during that bitterly cold Christmas season. The Hotton Report is a must read for those interested in the combat experience, specifically the Battle of the Bulge, and is a moving tribute to the indomitable spirit of the American combat soldier.
