EyeLeash: A Blog Novel Jess C Scott

Jade Ashton is a sassy virgin. In her private blog, she vents about "fitting in" a world where superficiality reigns supreme.

Suddenly all logic flies out the window when she meets Novan: the former geek, who's morphed into a delicious songwriter-musician. They decide to be "friends-with-benefits." But it's Novan, with his poems and riddling passages on his own blog--which isn't private--that backs out.

EyeLeash captures self-discovery in the 2000s, and showcases the colorful, intricate drama in two youths' relentless search for themselves--and what's really in their hearts.

GENRE: Alternative YA / Contemporary Fiction / New Media / Popular Culture / 65,000 words

REVIEWS:

"The conversation [in EyeLeash] struck me as totally authentic--the form [of the novel] is very contemporary and is integral to the story. This is how young people experience sex. It's how they experience love. The novel captures what they do, how they interact and how they feel...a mature mix." --Joseph Grinton, independent reviewer, July 18, 2009

"I'm going to be honest. When I first heard of a 'blog fiction' novel, I immediately thought it would be another IM fluffy rom-com, like TTYL by Lauren Myracle. But, once I read the description, I was intrigued...[Ms. Scott captures] perfectly the John Hughes-like angst every teenager goes through like any real teenager would--through the internet." --Danielle, book blogger, Aug 11, 2009
