Investment Through Life Assurance Joseph Field, Milton Grundy

The image of the slick life insurance salesman in a shiny suit has been the basis of a great deal of derisive humour and an image of fear and disdain in the hearts of many people in modern society. Insurance is a product. Its properties are neither religious nor really very magical. It is a product that varies greatly in structure and effect from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, and in some countries, simply offers no appreciable tax benefit to taxpayers. However, in a number of jurisdictions, it provides almost astonishing benefit and should be considered as a significant component piece when structuring a family's tax plan.
