Ezra tells his touching story of family love, laughter and loss while looking back to the years most influential in his young life. Living on a cattle ranch among Colorado's northern Rockies, his life in the 1950's unfolds as we are introduced to his two brothers, a sister, Gramps, Grandma and their two ranch hands. As the oldest child, Ezra is mindful of his obligations to Caleb, Eva and Luke. He does his part to keep the memory of their folks alive and works to keep the added burden from weighing heavily on their grandparents. All of their personalities intermingle in order for each one to become their unique self. Ol' Al and Ben are family members outside the biological circle. They are necessary for the ranch's success and prove to be ideal personalities influencing the four young children. Gramps and Grandma are the poles from which everything revolves. They are people who don't "talk the talk" but "walk the walk" of hard work, honesty, compassion and love. Ezra's simple existence becomes complicated when love for a puppy gives his life purpose and his dream reachable. Together they merge onto a road with one destination. The end is in focus, but the route is blurred with life's unforeseeable turns and ruts. It's a heartwarming story of how complicated a simple goal can become and how each of us must pass life's random tests within a limited time frame.
