Natalie and James hook up with handsome actor Gage Strickland in a wine-induced threesome which flouts Natalie's fantasies of being in the middle. While Gage and Natalie pair off, Gage also lets James take him.

James's bisexuality doesn't change Natalie's love. The adventure ignites their sex life for weeks, until it's clear Gage is not going to call. In his usual alpha mode, James attempts to convince his wife to do for him what Gage did, but she refuses.

Then, full of apologies, Gage returns. James seems to prefer watching Gage with Natalie before taking Gage himself over "the usual" with his wife. Luckily, there's one intimacy Gage won't engage—in but Natalie will.

Natalie sees how often James hurts Gage and worries about why the actor would allow it. For love? As submission? A show of devotion? Whatever the reason, James's increasing closeness to Gage, in and out of bed, casts clouds of doubt over the marriage.

When a contrite Gage finally goes to his knees for James, trouble rains down. And if Natalie and James want their marriage to work, they're going to have to rebuild it, the three of them, brick by brick.
