Sex, Drugs & Islam: Autobiography of an X Fighter Pilot Dari Ghaznavi

This unusual autobiography is a provocative and gripping account of the life of a Pakistani Air Force fighter pilot. An Agnostic & Epicurean approach to life is promoted in the book along with a rejection for the religious fervor that currently plagues the Muslim world, particularly his native, Pakistan. An intellectual at heart, the author thoughtfully describes his love for knowledge and self-improvement whilst portraying a righteous disdain for Islamist warriors. This raw and riveting narrative is crafted with the philosophical underpinnings of the "Nature of Things". There is true crime, suspense and mystery with author's fearless and reckless approach to life, full of humor and entertainment. You will think the author is talking to you over dinner, of bedding women all over the Americas, regaling you with his secret and sexual escapades in a smooth, unruffled manner. He then takes us on a roller coaster ride with terrifying accounts of shady deals and drug running as he flies his airplane across the Mexican/American borders. He talks explicitly about stabbings, shootings, illicit deals that went terribly wrong, and being interrogated by the FBI/DEA. Dari's sexual escapades of clubbing, women, sexual infidelities, and drugs have you wondering how this guy survived on razor's edge as long as he did without getting killed or contracting Aids. Dari also makes deadly enemies, when he makes frontal assault at Pakistan and Islamic religion and its followers. Ghaznavi makes an extra-ordinary turnaround and tries to become the best man he knows, and succeeds. The author tells you a wild and wondrous true story of his life which captures you from the beginning to the end. Eventually life catches up with Ghaznavi.
